Introduction of Zhanjiang

Zhanjiang lies in the southwest of Guangdong Province. It is situated in Leizhou Peninsular, neighboring the South Sea in the east and Beibu Gulf in the west. The city is separated from Hainan Province by Qiongzhou Strait. With a population of about 7.13 million, it covers an area of 12,49

0 square kilometers. Zhanjiang has 4 administrative divisions (Chikan, Xiashan, Potou, Mazhang), 3 county-level cities (Wuchuan, Lianjiang, Leizhou) and 2 counties (Suixi, Xuwen).

Located in the north of the Tropic of Cancer, Zhanjiang enjoys a tropical and subtropical monsoon climate. Influenced by the ocean climate, the city escapes the heat of the summer and chilliness of the winter. With the average temperature of 22.8°C, Zhanjiang is favorable for visiting at any season.

As a resource-rich tropical city, Zhanjiang is famous for a variety of tropical fruits and seafood.

It is also the export processing base of prawns.

Huguangyan, which is adjacent to Guangdong Ocean University, has the most typical and large st maar volcanic lake in the world and is also the education base of popular science for teenagers nationwide. Naozhou Island is the largest volcanic island in China and its Naozhou Beacon has a history of over a hundred years.
